Perhaps something can be said on both sides. they must be considered in instituting any countries. Some very interesting and sensible observations on the health of foreign residents in China are made by Dr. JAMESON. for the half year ending March last, which have just been issued. Dr. Jameson, we think, touches the real point at issue when, in speaking of residence in Shanghai, he says: "that so much remains in our hands in the way of health influences that in the greater number of cases our ailments are directly or

Of twelve cases of sunstroke which came under the observation of Dr. LITTLE at Shanghai, it was found that in nearly every instance these patients indulged freely inalcoholic liquors. Dr. Henderson, also of Shanghai, remarks that by far the greater majority of cases of heat apoplexy have intemperance as a powerfully predisposing cause. however, limited his physiological knowledge, knows quite well that many other ailments are produced by over indulgence in brandy. We are no advocates for a tight-laced policy issue on or about the 10th proximo. in these matters; but there is nothing gained by winking at facts. "Brandy and soda" has become quite a standing institution all over the world, but more especially in tropical parts, and nothing could be more detrimental to health than a free indulgence in it. And not only in this stimulant per se is there great danger, but when morning cocktails on empty stomachs are followed by ercise in Hongkong-and no doubt it is the same elsewhere among the foreign residents

But the fashionable mode of taking it in these days is to get in their chairs at their own doors and never to get out again till they return to the point of starting. Now it is all very well to be fashionable when the price is not too great; but when falling in with prevailing customs very often costs us health, it is surely time to kick against them. We are quite aware that it is not considered the thing in our community for two or three ladies to go out by themselves without their chairs, and if any of them were asked the reason they would only reply that they do it because others do it. He would not care for that. The safety of the public demanded an instant settlement of the matter. The chances of evil were continually on the inoresse. In the Summer, three steamers a day leave the country, and in the fog the chances of not colliding were really small. Off the Banks, where the poor fishermen were, there was always four and who could doubt that every year many of their boats were run down by steamers? If a vessel has to run through a fog she desires to do so as quickly as possible. the chances of collision not being increased and the time of exposure to danger be greatly shortened. On the Atlantic a ve at had to traverse say 400 miles of fog. If she. did this at a moderate rate of speed, what would become of her mail contracts? What would become of her passengers? The Postmaster-General would not listen to any atatement about fogs. He would simply aunul the contract. Now, in the Collision Act Congress has done all it can do. The idea of ocean lunes was a good one, but Congress could do nothing in the matter. In fact, with the exception of Philadelphia, America had no steamship lines that arosard the Atlantic. Stil the idea was a good one, and he thought it could be utilized on the lakes. Vessels going from Buffalo to Chicago could keep five miles outside the land, returning could keep within the five miles. Perhaps the only practical way would be to leave the matter to the underwriters, who could insert a clause in the policy of insurance whereby it should be vitinted if the Captain did not take the occan lane. Prof. Peirce said be had conversed with merchants on the subject, and they were totally averse to any such action, and declared they would not insure with any underwriter who should insert such a clause.

Dorman B. Eaton remarked that the first and primal necessity was to correct the ridiculous and suicidal idea of the public with regard to steamships, The public did not ask, " Is the line a safe one ?" No: they inquired whether it was fast, whether the mirrors were large. the furniture luxurious, the cuisine sumptuous. They took the safety for granted. If a steamship company would build a vessel I non-fact land with the fact been, and would fit it up gorgeously, and assure the world that it would make the passage one day quicker, everybody would rush to it. The main fault was with the public, not with the steamship ines. If the public demanded sufety, it would be furnished. It demanded speed at all hazards. follow as a natural consequence.
